"La Boheme" And "Samson" Xmas Operas

By Syl ester Rawling.
"L' BOHEME" for a special

Christmas matinee yesterday at the Metropolitan Opera House brought May Petrovna into the cast as Mimì. She was a pretty and demure soprano. Her voice at the beginning was clear from divine Justice to her lovely voice, which improved steadily and after the first act sang with confidence. Her death scene was well conceived and acted. John McCormick was Rodolfo. He was in fine voice and spirit and he made a very tender lover. De Lucia, Duran and Segurini were the other bassos, making a rollicking quartet. Ruth Miller and Leonard Malatsky and Ausilio and Banchigian completed the cast. Mr. Papi conducting. A large audience enjoyed a rattling good performance.

"Samson et Dalila" was the Christmas Eve offering at the Opera House with Louise Homer the alluring Philistine who comes to smash and to bind captivity. She was in lovely voice and was a more than plausible siren, despite her too modern gowns. Caruso was Samson, now, perhaps, his best part. He sang gloriously. Amato was the High Priest, and the cast included Rothko, Schiebel, Bloch, Ausilio and Reschke. Monti was conducting. Mr. Papi's chorus distinguished itself and the ballet led by Rosina Galli, was captivating.
